

‘b>2004-2005 Annual Report Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

The Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services is a regional organization responsible for the delivery of health and social services to the Inuit population of Nunavik. It is composed of nine local health and social service agencies and a central administration. The board's mandate is to provide health and social services that are appropriate, accessible, and responsive to the needs of the Inuit population.

The board's budget for the 2004-2005 fiscal year was $150 million. The board spent approximately 75% of its budget on health services, 20% on social services, and 5% on administrative costs. The board also received funding from the Canadian government through the Aboriginal Health and Social Services Program (AHSSP).

The board's priority areas for 2004-2005 include:

- Improving access to health services in remote communities through the implementation of telemedicine and mobile clinics.
- Addressing mental health issues, particularly depression and anxiety, among the Inuit population.
- Developing culturally appropriate programs to address substance abuse and addictions.
- Promoting healthy lifestyles through nutrition, physical activity, and smoking cessation programs.
- Providing supports and services to vulnerable populations, including the elderly, children, and people with disabilities.

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

The Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services is a regional organization responsible for the delivery of health and social services to the Inuit population of Nunavik. It is composed of nine local health and social service agencies and a central administration. The board's mandate is to provide health and social services that are appropriate, accessible, and responsive to the needs of the Inuit population.

The board's budget for the 2004-2005 fiscal year was $150 million. The board spent approximately 75% of its budget on health services, 20% on social services, and 5% on administrative costs. The board also received funding from the Canadian government through the Aboriginal Health and Social Services Program (AHSSP).

The board's priority areas for 2004-2005 include:

- Improving access to health services in remote communities through the implementation of telemedicine and mobile clinics.
- Addressing mental health issues, particularly depression and anxiety, among the Inuit population.
- Developing culturally appropriate programs to address substance abuse and addictions.
- Promoting healthy lifestyles through nutrition, physical activity, and smoking cessation programs.
- Providing supports and services to vulnerable populations, including the elderly, children, and people with disabilities.

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

The Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services is a regional organization responsible for the delivery of health and social services to the Inuit population of Nunavik. It is composed of nine local health and social service agencies and a central administration. The board's mandate is to provide health and social services that are appropriate, accessible, and responsive to the needs of the Inuit population.

The board's budget for the 2004-2005 fiscal year was $150 million. The board spent approximately 75% of its budget on health services, 20% on social services, and 5% on administrative costs. The board also received funding from the Canadian government through the Aboriginal Health and Social Services Program (AHSSP).

The board's priority areas for 2004-2005 include:

- Improving access to health services in remote communities through the implementation of telemedicine and mobile clinics.
- Addressing mental health issues, particularly depression and anxiety, among the Inuit population.
- Developing culturally appropriate programs to address substance abuse and addictions.
- Promoting healthy lifestyles through nutrition, physical activity, and smoking cessation programs.
- Providing supports and services to vulnerable populations, including the elderly, children, and people with disabilities.

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

The Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services is a regional organization responsible for the delivery of health and social services to the Inuit population of Nunavik. It is composed of nine local health and social service agencies and a central administration. The board's mandate is to provide health and social services that are appropriate, accessible, and responsive to the needs of the Inuit population.

The board's budget for the 2004-2005 fiscal year was $150 million. The board spent approximately 75% of its budget on health services, 20% on social services, and 5% on administrative costs. The board also received funding from the Canadian government through the Aboriginal Health and Social Services Program (AHSSP).

The board's priority areas for 2004-2005 include:

- Improving access to health services in remote communities through the implementation of telemedicine and mobile clinics.
- Addressing mental health issues, particularly depression and anxiety, among the Inuit population.
- Developing culturally appropriate programs to address substance abuse and addictions.
- Promoting healthy lifestyles through nutrition, physical activity, and smoking cessation programs.
- Providing supports and services to vulnerable populations, including the elderly, children, and people with disabilities.

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

The Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services is a regional organization responsible for the delivery of health and social services to the Inuit population of Nunavik. It is composed of nine local health and social service agencies and a central administration. The board's mandate is to provide health and social services that are appropriate, accessible, and responsive to the needs of the Inuit population.

The board's budget for the 2004-2005 fiscal year was $150 million. The board spent approximately 75% of its budget on health services, 20% on social services, and 5% on administrative costs. The board also received funding from the Canadian government through the Aboriginal Health and Social Services Program (AHSSP).

The board's priority areas for 2004-2005 include:

- Improving access to health services in remote communities through the implementation of telemedicine and mobile clinics.
- Addressing mental health issues, particularly depression and anxiety, among the Inuit population.
- Developing culturally appropriate programs to address substance abuse and addictions.
- Promoting healthy lifestyles through nutrition, physical activity, and smoking cessation programs.
- Providing supports and services to vulnerable populations, including the elderly, children, and people with disabilities.

Conclusion

> Francine Lavoie¹, Gina Muckle^{1,2}, Sarah Fraser^{1,2} and Olivier Boucher^{1,2}

¹ École de psychologie, Université Laval

² Unité de recherche en santé publique
Centre de recherche du Centre Hospitalier Universitaire de Québec

References

> Louis Rochette
Unité Connaissance-surveillance
Direction Planification, recherche et innovation
Institut national de santé publique du Québec

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

The Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services is a regional organization responsible for the delivery of health and social services to the Inuit population of Nunavik. It is composed of nine local health and social service agencies and a central administration. The board's mandate is to provide health and social services that are appropriate, accessible, and responsive to the needs of the Inuit population.

The board's budget for the 2004-2005 fiscal year was $150 million. The board spent approximately 75% of its budget on health services, 20% on social services, and 5% on administrative costs. The board also received funding from the Canadian government through the Aboriginal Health and Social Services Program (AHSSP).

The board's priority areas for 2004-2005 include:

- Improving access to health services in remote communities through the implementation of telemedicine and mobile clinics.
- Addressing mental health issues, particularly depression and anxiety, among the Inuit population.
- Developing culturally appropriate programs to address substance abuse and addictions.
- Promoting healthy lifestyles through nutrition, physical activity, and smoking cessation programs.
- Providing supports and services to vulnerable populations, including the elderly, children, and people with disabilities.

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

Δ>2004-2005 Annual Report
Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services

The Nunavik Regional Board of Health and Social Services is a regional organization responsible for the delivery of health and social services to the Inuit population of Nunavik. It is composed of nine local health and social service agencies and a central administration. The board's mandate is to provide health and social services that are appropriate, accessible, and responsive to the needs of the Inuit population.

The board's budget for the 2004-2005 fiscal year was $150 million. The board spent approximately 75% of its budget on health services, 20% on social services, and 5% on administrative costs. The board also received funding from the Canadian government through the Aboriginal Health and Social Services Program (AHSSP).

The board's priority areas for 2004-2005 include:

- Improving access to health services in remote communities through the implementation of telemedicine and mobile clinics.
- Addressing mental health issues, particularly depression and anxiety, among the Inuit population.
- Developing culturally appropriate programs to address substance abuse and addictions.
- Promoting healthy lifestyles through nutrition, physical activity, and smoking cessation programs.
- Providing supports and services to vulnerable populations, including the elderly, children, and people with disabilities.

